Leadership in Service-Learning

Make a positive difference in the community as well as in the lives of OSU undergraduate students. Develop reflection and facilitation skills. Acquire classroom experience supporting undergraduate student engaging in service-learning. Become a course facilitator with ES HESA 2571: Leadership in Community Service.

ES HESA 2571 is a three-credit undergraduate course in which enrolled students conduct three weekly hours of service with a variety of community agencies and settings: afterschool programs for public school children, social and recreational centers for senior citizens, food assistance programs, and refugee support programs, to name a few. Undergraduates also attend class once a week dedicated to learning more about social problems and leadership related to social change. Additionally, students engage in reflection on their service-learning.

As a course facilitator, you would assist the instructor with planning class activities, leading class discussion, planning small group sessions, grading assignments, supervising students, and maintaining positive relationships with community service organizations. Training is offered to HESA student facilitators to support their development.

Priority given to HESA students who have taken ES HESA 7558: Administering Service-Learning Programs (offered spring semester).

This experience is enhanced by enrolling in Dr. Gilbride-Brown’s graduate course Administering Service Learning Programs (ES HESA 7558) during the spring semester of your first year.
